■ ENC 1102: Tradition and Globalization with Professor Ronald Feemster

Research the social issues, history, and culture of India. The final multimedia research project lays a foundation for identifying and understanding one issue that shapes India's complex society. The course will use modern cities and ancient sites to investigate changes and conflicts wrought by the global economy. The rise of technology has increased personal freedom and wealth for many, but has done little to diminish India's widespread poverty and environmental destruction. Credit for Comp II or an independent research project.

■ GEB 1101: Introduction to Business with Dr. Debbie Psihountas

This course provides a general outline of the nature of business, including ownership, management, and organization. Business operations such as finance and decision-making controls are emphasized. The legal and regulatory environment in which business operates is examined. For the India-based portion of the course, emphasis will be given to providing comparisons between how businesses operate and are structured in India versus in the United States. Business is growing rapidly in India, and it is projected to be the third largest market soon for automobile sales and other industries. Gain a first-hand look at how businesses operate in this country.
